Korra and Asami's Unexpected Descent from the Sky, Rae and Claire's Confusion, and May and Aleah's Wonder

by lefemmerouge2

Summary

One day, a brown-skinned woman, with dark brown hair, and her girlfriend, with raven-colored hair, fall from the sky, surprising Rae, Claire, May, and Aleah. As they continue talking, each of them learns a bit about themselves. They connect over everything each of them has been through, in their efforts to fight evildoers and bring peace, and Korra and Asami learn a shocking truth about their lives and world.

Notes

Originally I had planned to write a fic in which Korra and Manaria fight (that is upcoming). However, I decided to change it up and write this fic after volume two of the ILTV light novel series, especially since Claire and Rae have settled into their new, and peaceful, lives. So, I wanted to make this less combative and focus more on talking with someone else about their experiences, rather than a battle, something which Rae, Claire, Korra, and Asami would appreciate, after everything they have been through. I started writing this fic after finishing volume two of the aforementioned light novel and finished it after my LOK rewatch. I hope you enjoy this fic! I'd love to, possibly, write a follow-up fic in the future.

Comments are welcome and appreciated.

Update: This fic was also posted on Quotev, Wattpad (with a shortened title), and Squidge World, and Asianfanfics. Also see my ILTV/ATLA crossover, entitled "Claire and Rae Meet the Aang Gang", here

Claire was attempting to make an upside-down cake with yellowish fruit. In another world, it would have been called a pineapple, but here it was called a "yellow spiky fruit," which was a more fitting name. In any case, she was not successful. She didn't know how Rae had cooked so many perfect meals for her. Had she been a cook in her previous life?

Even now, she didn't know much about Rae's previous life. But she didn't care about that now. What mattered was their happiness together and that their daughters, May and Aleah, were content. Although May and Aleah were adopted, both she and Rae treated them as their own. Claire cried out. She was despondent since her dish had been burned to a crisp. "Rae, can you please help?...I did it again."

Rae came running in from outside their quaint cottage, which sat in the countryside, among rolling green hills. Claire had been so loud that she could clearly hear her. Her deep love of Claire, in her previous life and in her current life, meant that she was well attuned to her voice. Hearing it everyday, and the fact they were living happily ever after (in a sense), brought her immense joy.

Using her water magic, she put out the fire. The smoke dissipated. "Miss Claire...it's ok," she said, while caressing her partner's head. Although Claire would have once raised a stink with Rae over this, she had gotten used to being lovingly touched on the head. This tranquil and sweet moment would soon be interrupted, in a way that none of them expected.

Aleah and May came inside the cottage with a look of sheer terror on their faces. "Mother Claire, some ladies dropped from the sky," Aleah stated as she shook. May followed up what her sister had said, adding, "And both of them are really pretty like you, Mother Rae...and Mother Claire."

Although May's pause annoyed Claire a little, she was glad that her daughter recognized beauty, especially in women. As some say, beauty is in the eye of the beholder.

Rae and Claire told their daughters to stay put. As Rae closed the door behind her partner, they approached the two woman who were huddled on the ground. A brown-skinned, and blue-eyed person, with dark brown hair, put her hands over the tan-skinned and black-haired woman next to her, in an attempt to protect her. She shouted, "I won't let you touch MY girlfriend!"

Weakened from the unexpected fall from the sky, she couldn't even summon her elemental powers. She slumped on top of the other woman, who was much more friendly.

"I'm Asami Sato, and this is my girlfriend, Korra," she began. She then made a request. "I'm not as badly injured from the fall...but she is...can you please treat her?"

Asami knew this was a big ask. But she felt she had no choice but to ask them. Who else was out there in the country? If they said no, she wasn't sure what she would do.

Rae was a bit concerned. She didn't remember anyone like this from the game. She was unsure where they came from. But, she felt an obligation to help them because... they were girls in love... and they really looked like they cared about each other. And isn't that what mattered?

"Ok, sure, I'll treat her. You can come in too, Miss Sato."

As she entered into the cottage with Rae (who was carrying Korra), and Claire, she remarked, "It's fine, there's no need to be that formal. Call me Asami." Rae accepted this, even though she predicted it might make Claire "jelly." She sometimes teased her about this.

Sure enough, Claire was red-faced after Rae said the words "Sure, Asami." She grumbled. "Why can't you do that with ME, Rae? You can call me Claire...there's no need for the 'Miss' anymore."

Rae, also blushing, replied. "It's too embarrassing...I'm just used to calling you...Miss Claire."

"That's not fair, Rae!" Claire retorted, while lightly punching her in the arm. Her teasing was one of the many reasons that Rae loved her so much. She was grateful for every day she got to spend with Miss Claire. She needed no god, no higher power. She had Miss Claire all to herself.

The girls were amazed. May and Aleah had seen women with the same skin complexion as Asami before, but Korra...was different. Not many people with skin that dark brown lived in these parts of the Bauer Kingdom, which remained peaceful, for now.

Rae used her healing magic on Korra, who had a nasty gash on her side from the fall. She could tell that Korra had been through a lot and guessed that the same was the case for Asami. She wasn't always good at noticing these things. Something about them seemed familiar, like she had seen them somewhere in her former world, although she couldn't be completely sure, as her memory was vague.

Korra suddenly awoke and stretched. She looked around and was confused. Where was she? She suddenly remembered that she had been falling from the sky, and that two women approached her after she landed on the ground. She suddenly saw two golden-haired girls staring at her. She realized they were curious about her. While flexing her muscles could work with some, she decided to do something else instead.

"Would you both like to see something cool?"

May and Aleah looked toward Rae and Claire for approval. "Can Miss Korra show us something?...Please Mother Rae and Mother Claire?"

They acquiesced to the request from their daughters. Who could resist them when they looked so cute? Claire gave a word of a caution. "It's ok if she does a demonstration outside the house."

"Ok, Mother Claire," Aleah said, sweetly.

She and May held Korra's hands and led her outside. Rae came behind them both, while Claire stayed back with Asami. She hoped to learn more about them both, although she didn't have fuzzy memories of her like Rae did. She had never met or seen Korra nor Asami prior to this.

As the two golden-haired girls watched intently, Korra began using her hands and bending water from a nearby pond, all while she levitated herself in the air. Coming outside after seeing all the wind, Claire was astounded. How could someone do something like that?

She knew that Yu was good at water magic and that Thane was good with wind magic. In fact, Yu could even use water magic to fight from a distance, either creating ice or water barriers, ice arrows, ice spikes, and standard healing abilities. All the while, she was aware that Rod was a master at using fire magic, allowing him to call forth soldiers of fire to fight on his behalf. The latter could even self-destruct, exploding on his command. This paled in comparison to what Korra could do.

Claire, curious about Korra's abilities, approached. She wanted to see what else this mystery woman could do. She was clearly a dual-caster, but no one else was a quad-caster like sister Manaria, right?

"So, you can use water and air magic...what about fire magic...or earth magic? Surely you can't use those too, right? Only a certain woman I know can..."

Korra chuckled. She wouldn't mind showing off, especially to someone she considered attractive. She guessed that Asami, who was still inside, was watching, but she didn't mind teasing her... this time.

"I can use all elemental magic. I am the Avatar after all!" she exclaimed.

When she said that, something clicked for Rae. In her old world, Korra and Asami were from an animated series that she thoroughly enjoyed, even though she had some issues with the storyline, and how some characters had been portrayed. Through it all, she had been the biggest-ever Korrasami fan, even arguing with people online about it, writing fan fiction, and going to several Korrasami-themed conventions. It had been a short-lived period, but she still looked back at it fondly. Despite that, she couldn't make sense as to why they were there.

Rae began inner-fangirling, knowing it would be disastrous if she ever revealed anything about who they truly were, or how she deeply loved both of their characters. She also knew it could cause possible fissure with Claire or at the very minimum, make her life a little more complicated.

Asami rolled her eyes as Korra continued to show off, amazing Aleah and May, but also Claire, and especially Rae. When Claire looked over at Rae, she was worried. Rae seemed to be studying every nook and cranny of Korra's movements, which terrified her. She did not want a situation resembling what happened with Manaria or Lilly, whose affections toward Rae had made her jealous, although she obviously would not openly admit this, despite Rae's prodding.

"Why don't we all go inside and have some nice desserts that I got from the store? We can have a nice conversation over some tea. We've had enough show and tell for now."

Rae could see exactly what was happening. She decided to tease her, a little bit, while recognizing her concerns. She didn't want this to become a rift between them.

"Miss Claire, are you jelly?"

She huffed that the accusation, even though it was absolutely true. She couldn't admit that!

"No, of course I'm not, Rae! I'm just looking out for you..."

Rae shook her head. She knew that Claire was covering for herself on this. She wouldn't have expected otherwise from the woman she loved. But, she had to clear this up, and now.

"Fine, fine. Let's go inside then. And I'll tell you something that will hopefully set you at ease."

As they all went inside, Aleah and May were a bit disappointed. Even Korra was bummed. She wanted to show off more. Asami was a bit relieved as she could tell that Rae might have feelings for Korra. The last thing she wanted was another romantic interloper. No more romantic drama!

Sitting down at a table, as Rae prepared the desserts, Claire poured the tea into fancy porcelain cups which happened to be sitting out on the table. They sat in silence for a bit. Rae decided to start off.

"I'm sorry, Asami and Korra, but I'm a big fangirl. I loved you in that TV series and the graphic novels...they were really the best...I wish the writers had done so much better, and you kissed when you entered the spirit world...they really didn't do as good a job as they should have..."

She stopped herself before she got too far. She had done exactly what she hadn't meant to do! She had told them they weren't real! Oops! She had stepped in it now.

Claire attempted to tamp this down. She chuckled, trying to laugh it off.

"Oh my sweet Rae says such silly things sometimes, don't worry about it, Korra and Ms. Sato...I don't know where she gets all of it...please don't pay what she is saying any mind."

What Claire had said did help, but not with everything. They remained skeptical, especially since Rae had mentioned the "spirit world." Clearly she knew something. But how? Wasn't this the first time they'd met? What was going on?

Rae appreciated what Claire had said, but she knew that if she kept this up, it could be a disaster. And she didn't want to hide the truth from them completely either.

"Korra...and Asami, can I talk to you both...for a bit...in private?"

They nodded. They wanted to know how she knew about something so personal to their lives, since they had only met that very day (and by accident).

Pulling them into a side room, Rae used special magic to obscure their conversation from anyone who was listening, including Claire, May, and Aleah. While this made Claire nervous, she accepted it for now, as long as it, hopefully, calmed things down. Turning to Korra and Asami, Rae laid on the big reveal.

"Ok, this may come as a shock, but you are both characters in a...uh...TV series. They are kinda like movers in Republic City, that you know about. And in my previous world, there were a lot of fans of the show, including those who loved when both of you got together. They dubbed your relationship "Korrasami," which combines both your names. And there were some rad graphic novels."

This news disconcerted Korra and Asami. Were they just puppets of someone else who dictated what they did? Had their lives been completely meaningless? They were beginning to lose it. Rae hoped to ease their worries with another comment. She didn't want them to lose their humanity.

"But, don't worry, you are real to yourselves. Don't fret about anyone else. This world is even, in fact, an otome game in my former world. I reincarnated here after I died. I haven't even told Claire about that completely, yet. I've tried but she doesn't believe me...so please keep it a secret."

Korra and Asami looked at each other. They could tell that Rae was being genuine, despite the word "otome game" having no meaning to them. Even so, what she told them had shaken them to the core. Korra piped up first.

"Was the series at least popular? I mean, did people like us? Were we mover stars? And why is it Korrasami, not Korrami, Korrsami, or AsaKorra?"

Rae shrugged. How could she answer them without saying too much? She tried to keep it brief. She could never tell them that they were voiced by other people, meaning that their voices, in a sense, were not really their own, or that they were animated. That would completely freak them out.

"First of all, the company that produced the show screwed it over a bit. The creators even had to fight to keep in that scene of you both entering the spirit portal...and I guess you were stars? And yes the order is important! It's Korra x Asami, not Asami x Korra! The order makes clear who is the dominant one and who is the submissive one! It's vitally important issue!"

Asami came close to Rae. She was distressed about what Rae had been saying, especially the fact that they might have been stars. At the same time, she had no idea why Rae was so worked about the name order. She did not like that she was being called the "submissive one" and Korra the "dominant one". Wasn't it sometimes the other way around? Did that sort of lingo mean anything? Claire would have certainly reacted the same way, since she was similarly confused when Rae insisted on the 'correct' order when telling a story about the love square she was a part of, partially unknowingly, in her former life.

There seemed to be a lot of hemming and hawing. Even so, she hoped the show had a positive impact. That was the minimum they could get out of it. She was unsure what else she could say.

"Did our show make a big splash? Do people still talk about it now?"

Rae smiled happily. She was willing to answer that. It was easy enough to respond to. After all, she had been a mega-fan for a while and had avidly followed the news. She wouldn't tell them too much as it would bore them, but she was willing to tell them enough to satisfy their questions.

"Before I was reincarnated in this world, there was still an active group of fans. And people loved it for the queer representation, since both of you were bisexual."

They both looked at each other. What the heck she talking about? What does those words mean?

"Bisexual? Queer? Never heard of that." Korra stated, innocently. These terms seemed strange.

Rae forgot that these words didn't exist in their world. She had said something accidental again. She had to at least explain it to them. It was the minimum she could do.

"Bisexual means you are romantically attracted to men and women. Queer means you either aren't heterosexual, like a woman who only loves a man, or cisgender, meaning that your gender corresponds with your sex that you are assigned when you are born."

This sort of made sense to them, although Asami still had some questions. She wanted to know more about these labels, these strange words. It was worth knowing about them even though they may never use them at all.

"So, Tenzin, who was in love with Pema, and formerly Lin, would be heterosexual, while I would be cisgender as doctors labeled me as a girl when I born, but I identify as a woman."

Rae grinned. Asami was starting to get it. There was more to it. She began to explain. Of course she wouldn't tell them everything, but she would tell them enough as a start. Providing education to people who had begun to recognize their queer identity was important. There was a right place and time for it, as she obviously wouldn't be doing this around a bunch of rapid homophobes.

"Yes, but that's only scratching the surface. Within the umbrella of 'queer' there are those whose gender identity doesn't align with what a doctor assigned them as birth, people known as 'transgender', while asexual people have no romantic attraction to anyone, non-binary people don't identify strictly as male or female, lesbians are only romantically attracted to women, and pansexual people are attracted to anyone regardless of gender, to give a few examples."

Korra's head was spinning. That was a lot to remember. It was a bit confusing!

"...That's a lot, Rae. I don't think I'll use any of those labels for myself, as it's hard to recall all of that, but it's interesting to learn how different cultures do it."

As they ended their pleasantries, Asami and Korra thanked Rae for this information. They all rejoined Claire at the table in the main part of the house. The tea was still sitting there and somehow hadn't gone cold thanks to Claire's firebending (if it could be called that) abilities and a cozy that Rae had made for the teapot. She loved that cozy, but not as much as Rae, obviously.

"You were gone for some time. Did you get everything resolved?"

Korra and Asami nodded. Asami spoke first.

"Yes, Miss Claire. Rae told us about things we didn't know before, new words, and new concepts. I can't wait to bring them back to Republic City and tell our friends."

Rae wasn't sure that was the best idea or what exactly she had unleashed, but she attempted to tamp down that enthusiasm. Just because concepts worked well in her old world didn't mean they would work well in the world that Korra, Asami, and their friends inhabited.

"What I told you are concepts from where I came from. Please don't impose them on another world. Come up with your own labels and ideas...I only wanted to educate you on part of what I know."

Asami and Korra understood what she was saying, even though they couldn't get over the fact that they had been part of a TV show but didn't even know about it. They continued chatting for hours and hours with Rae, Claire, Aleah, and May, about every topic under the sun. However, it was clear they couldn't stay forever. Rae knew that and Claire suspected it. Soon enough, an inter-dimensional portal to their world opened.

"Thank you all for what you have told us and your hospitality. We will never forget you."

Claire came close and hugged them. "Thank you Korra and Miss Sato. Your kindness will always be remembered. Please take care of yourself!" As she said that, they waved to both of them, and kissed each other as they walked through the portal. Rae guessed they had done that for her. In reality, they had done it for themselves.

She turned to Rae, who looked starry-eyed. She still wasn't sure what this was all about, but she didn't care. At least they were gone, not because she hated them, but due to the fact that romantic interlopers, as she saw them, toward Rae had departed. That made it easier for her. And that was a good thing, in her mind.

As they walked back to the house, Rae whispered into Claire's ear something which caught her off guard. She hadn't thought she would hear this from her.

"I was telling the truth about Korra and Asami. They were part of an animated TV series from my previous world...and it was named the Legend of Korra."

Claire still wasn't sure if Rae was pulling her leg or not. For now, she was ok with accepting what Rae was saying. She played along.

"Legend of Korra? It should be called 'The Legendary Tales of Korra and Asami' or something else that brings both their names together."

Rae still liked the original name, but she was glad that Claire was taking her seriously. She hugged Claire close and whispered, "don't worry, I'll be with you no matter what."

Claire hugged her back and they remained in an embrace until the sun set over the horizon, where they rejoined their two daughters inside. What adventures remained ahead was up to them and them alone.

End Notes

This fic relies on information from the I'm in Love with the Villainess Wiki, Avatar Wiki, and my knowledge of the manga and light novels. Although Korra can Earthbend as well, those abilities aren't shown in this fic.
